Take a guess

Under a big tree in the schoolyard, there sat three children. Each of them asked a riddle to let others guess what their parents do as a living. The first child said, "My father is tall, but he fits into and talks through a box half a foot high. He said softly: 'Good morning, little friends!' Children all over the country can hear him. What do you say my father does?"

The second child said: "For what we eat every day, dad toils all day, but he is not a chef. The land can give us beans, rice, fruits, vegetables for us...Without my father, the land would only grow weeds. What do you say my father does?"

The third child said: "My mother leads a group of children, she cares about what they eat, drink, and wear, and teaches them to read, sing, and dance...They are very young now, but they will definitely be vendors, craftsmen, teachers, doctors, drivers, pilots, scientists, and deliverymen..... in the future. What do you think my mother does?"
