My thoughts on the great migration.

Fellow students: The new school term has begun; do you have any new wishes? Last year, in the process of working with my classmates, we had some arguments because of differing views, this made me very sad.

Last weekend, I watched a TV show and realized something. Today, let me share it with you!

Every year, there is a great migration of animals in the African savannah. When the dry season comes, zebras, wildebeests, gazelles and other animals will migrate to the other side of the grassland in search of food and water to live. During this long journey, the animals overcome various difficulties encountered along the way with the help of collective wisdom.

In the wildebeest herd, the older wildebeest acts as the "leader". They can lead other wildebeests on a long-distance trek based on the distance they have travelled, and they will go through life and death together as a herd. When the wildebeest army cross the river in a big crowd, the situation becomes perilous. Apart from crossing the rapid river, they also have to fight off the crocodiles in the river. Those wildebeests that are targeted by crocodiles will struggle to escape, with some inevitably becoming the crocodile's meal.

As for the wildebeests that have successfully crossed the river, they are just a short distance away from the grassland with plenty of water and grass, but threats are still there—some lonely wildebeests that get stuck in the mud on the steep river bank full, crocodiles on the shore are waiting for them, ever-ready to kill. Even so, to escape from the dangerous riverbank, they must try their best to find the exit. Do you think wildebeests will be able to live in peace when they reach the grassland with plenty of water? When they successfully landed on the grassland, natural enemies such as lions, cheetahs and hyenas are hiding in the grass and watch their every move. During this time, if a wildebeest smells the scent of a predator, other wildebeest will be on alert and move around to avoid the enemy's pursuit, thereby greatly reducing the possibility of losing their lives in the grassland.

Year after year, wildebeests face the possibility of dying while crossing the river, only to be preyed upon by natural enemies after crossing the river. This scary fate of the wildebeests cannot be altered. In this process, only collective wisdom can break this cycle. Ladies and gentlemen, in the journey of life or study, when we are in trouble, we are like a lonely wildebeest and will be stuck on the same spot, unable to progress further because of cowardice.

However, as long as we gather the wisdom in a group, reach a consensus with the team, and stand firm, we can then face the unknown challenges together! Thanks!
