I love my home.

What is home?

Home is a lamp, a room, and a comfortable bed.

With lights, I am no longer afraid of nights without stars and moon.

With a room, I no longer worry about the wind and the rain.

With a bed, when I am tired and sleepy, I can sleep soundly.

What is home?

Home is the sun. The joyful smiles of my parents form the warm sunrays.

Lend a birthday.

In the morning, Qiqi woke up and saw a cute teddy bear beside her pillow.

Her mom came over and wished Kiki a happy birthday. Kiki asked: "Mom, how come you never celebrated your birthday?"

Mom smiled and said, "I forgot."

After breakfast, my mother was about to go to work. She picked up her bag and saw that there was a teddy bear in it.

She was about to take it out when Kiki hurried over and pressed her mother's hand, saying, "Mom, this teddy bear is a birthday present to you. You always forget your own birthday, so today I will lend you my birthday!" "

Mom hugged Kiki and smiled. Kiki smiled too.

Additional note:

借 can be translated to "borrow" or "lend" depending on the context, example below:

借给你 : lend to you

跟你借 : borrow from you

Lights.

A window to the east was lit, and so was the window to the west. Lights were turned on in every house.

Little sister, let's go home.

Look, the sunrises have gone behind the west mountain. There are beds for them to sleep on the other side of the mountain.

The birds also flew back to their nests. Their nests are still covered in the warmth that the sun gives them during the day. Do you know? At this hour their nests are also lit.

When the birds lie in their nests, they see stars hanging from the branches and become lights of the big trees.

Little sister, look, the lights in our house are also turned on. Under the lights, mother will tell us a new story.

Little sister, let's go home quickly!
